His love of music and the talent he shared will be carried on through his family for many years.

Bob spent many years babysitting his grandsons who were always excited to see what special project he would have ready for them to build. This included their clubhouse, a football goal post to practice kicking, a bird house, frog pond and much more. He instilled within them a love of older music. Above all, Bob cherished time spent with family and friends and found his greatest happiness in being surrounded by those he loved.
